CHARTER

Health worker safety:
a priority for patient safety

This Charter is dedicated to the millions of health workers<sup>1</sup> fighting COVID-19 across the globe who put themselves and their families at risk to treat patients, deliver essential health services and contain the spread of the disease; to the health workers who have become infected with COVID-19; and to those who have lost their lives in their unstinting efforts to combat the disease.

<sup>1</sup> Health workers are all people engaged in work actions whose primary intent is to improve health. This includes health service providers, such as doctors, nurses, midwives, public health professionals, lab, health and medical and non-medical technicians, personal care workers, community health workers, healers and practitioners of traditional medicine. It also includes health management and support workers, such as cleaners, drivers, hospital administrators, district health managers and social workers, and other occupational groups in health-related activities. Health workers include not only those who work in acute care facilities but also those employed in long-term care, public health, community-based care, social care and home care.

ICN COVID-2019 Update: Data on infected healthcare workers and access to protective equipment vital in prevention of the virus

20 February 2020

The International Council of Nurses (ICN) continues to liaise with the World Health Organization (WHO) which is spearheading the global initiative to prevent the spread of the COVID-2019 virus. ICN is also closely supporting its national nursing associations in China and the region where nurses are on the front line caring for patients with the virus and putting themselves at risk.

ICN Call to Action COVID-19

- 1 Urgently prioritise ready access to sufficient quantity of high-quality and appropriate personal protective equipment (PPE) for nurses and other healthcare workers

Governments must ensure that production of such equipment is rapidly expanded to meet the demands of this pandemic and optimise supply chains for the rapid distribution of such materials. Manufacturers and businesses that are capable of assisting should step forward and rapidly scale up production or re-tool manufacturing lines to develop medical products (such as PPE).

Using their professional judgement, within the context of national/international evidence-based guidelines, nurses are best placed to select the appropriate PPE required, based on their assessment of the situation in which they are providing care. The application of practices and precautions should include a point of care risk assessment by the healthcare worker.
- 2 Ensure all nurses have appropriate evidence-based infection prevention and control training and the latest COVID-19-specific guidance and training

All healthcare workers must have access to infection prevention and control (IPC) training which should include application of the systematic, comprehensive approach of the hierarchy of controls. This includes the use of engineering controls, which remove or reduce hazards or place a barrier between the worker and the hazard; administrative controls, which include protocols and policies; and PPE.

Nurses must be kept informed of new and emerging COVID-19 specific guidance and advances/changes in policy/procedures as new information emerges on this virus. This must be communicated to nurses in an appropriate and timely manner.

Working in a pandemic may pose ethical challenges and nurses should be provided with ethical guidelines and procedural values frameworks to help guide decision-making.
- 3 Protect the health and wellbeing of nurses and other healthcare workers

Nurses are the largest group of frontline health professionals in the battle against COVID-19; their safety and wellbeing should be a priority for governments and healthcare organisations. Strategies must be developed and implemented to reduce the physical and psychosocial burden on nurses.

Governments should provide access to mental health and counselling resources. Employers must monitor and mitigate fatigue by ensuring appropriate respite between shifts and maintaining scheduled breaks while on shift.

Midwives and nurses are with you at every step of life

they see you into the world and care for you as you leave it, helping you to stay healthy and support you if you are sick.
